Week of March 9, 2008 Genocide Reparations

Michael Kavanagh/World Vision Report

A convicted génocidaire makes mud bricks in a T.I.G. camp in eastern Rwanda. The bricks will be used to build houses for survivors of the 1994 genocide.

Description

In order to handle hundreds of thousands of people convicted of crimes during Rwanda's 1994 genocide, the government has set up a unique program of community service for the convicted. They build houses for survivors of the genocide.

Some of the convicts say it's a meaningful form of reconciliation. But some survivors say a house can never replace family members killed in the genocide.

Michael Kavanagh reports.
